business continuity

As business continuity becomes increasingly threatened by the possibility of both malicious and environmental disasters, pressure is on business leaders to ensure they have a thorough and tested disaster recovery plan in place.

recovery centres

Often perceived as a costly 'just in case', a fully equipped second office can be available to you from just £125 per month.

Through its partnership with disaster recovery specialist, NDR, acs delivers this cost effective safeguard ensuring that, should disaster strike, your business stays in business. NDR is proving a popular choice with many business continuity conscious companies due to its hosting of recovery centres.

Should your premises not be accessible for any reason, you can be confident that your workforce can relocate to one of these local recovery centres.

In addition to these, acs and NDR also offer mobile recovery suites which house replica equipment and data. These can be on the road within 2 hours ensuring that your customers and trade are not affected.

online backup

Data is the foundation of your business. Alongside your staff, it is your most valuable corporate asset. As technology progresses, a new way to protect critical business information is emerging – secure online data backup.

Online backup is successful as it eliminates the manual aspects of data protection. As your data is securely stored off-site you no longer need to change physical tapes.

Data is automatically encrypted and securely transmitted each night and intelligent updates ensure your backups are completed faster. Unlike tape based backups, your information is always available and you can recover the latest version of any document over a secure online connection.

server replication

acs understands that it is imperative for your business to recover from unwelcome and unpredicted events in the minimum amount of time, with minimum disruption and at minimum cost. Achieving this requires careful planning coupled with the security of knowing you are working with a DR partner you can trust in.

Server replication is an integral part of business continuity. New technologies, such as those provided by acs and Double-Take, will ensure that valuable time is not lost rebuilding systems and re-installing programs should disaster strike. Double-Take also integrates seamlessly with data back-up procedures including both tape and online back-up solutions such as those delivered by Datastore365.
